

THURSDAY, MARCH 26, 2009

Vanessa: Forgotten Transports to Estonia

Forgotten Transports to Estonia was one of the first films I marked to see as I flipped through this year's CIFF film guide. I enjoy learning personal stories from and about those involved in WW II or any historic moment, really.

One of the greatest things about seeing this film on Tuesday, March 24th was staying after, listening to the director explain more about the film in detail. The director of this film, Lukas Pribyl, through a grant, researched, created and directed this documentary. Forgotten Transports to Estonia is actually one of four 90 minute films he has developed focusing on single WW II/Holocaust topics. Pribyl only uses raw footage and personal interviews to tell this story which made the documentary all the more interesting.

Post screening, Pribyl explained some of the finer details of making this film including the months and in some cases year's to track down specific photos that would make or break a story and the traveling involved with this documentary. He traveled to over 30 countries